

Bank Account, Routing Number and Check Number

In order to pay directly from your bank account, you'll need to provide us with your bank account number, bank routing number, and check number. You will find these numbers on the checks issued for your account.

The routing number, account number, and check number are located at the bottom edge of your check. Routing numbers are always 9 digits long. Account numbers may be up to 17 digits long. Some banks list the routing number first on the check, while other banks list the account number first, and still more list the routing number, check number, then account number. Below are examples of each type of check:

The routing and transit number is 9 digits surrounded by |:

The account number is usually left of || - if the check number is left of the account number, ignore the check number.

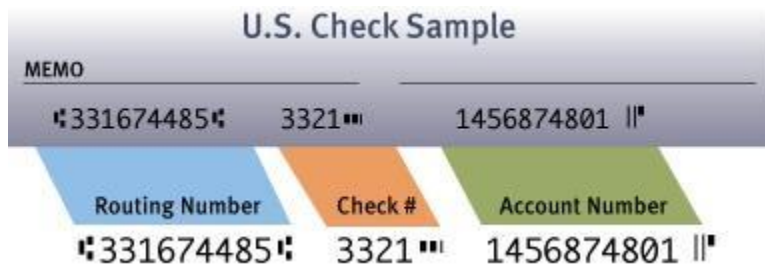

The check number should match the number in the upper right hand corner of the check.

The check number should match the number in the upper right hand corner of the check

The routing and transit number is 9 digits surrounded by |:

The account number is usually left of ||

The routing and transit number is 9 digits surrounded by |:

The check number should match the number in the upper right hand corner of the check and is followed by |||

The account number is usually left of ||